Anatomy of a student-built robot

by Nathalie Gagnon-Joseph

At parent-teacher conferences at Lake Region Union High School last week, a robot could reportedly be seen cruising down the hallways, controlled by Andre Messier, the principal.

Five students from The Science Challenge, a class offered at the school, built the robot — a combination forklift, bucket loader, and bulldozer — as part of the University of Vermont Technology and Science Challenge (TASC).

Denver Bodette, Sam Delorenzo, Ricky Ferland, Nikki Roessler, and Summer Fontaine weren't able to participate in the competition itself, but they followed TASC rules and designed and built the robot all the same.

The purpose of The Science Challenge, taught by Topher Waring, is to participate in TASC.

The competition was moved up by one month, reducing the amount of time the students had to make their robot, he said.

"Their progress was deliberate and good, but they were only working during class time," he said, explaining why the team wasn't able to be part of the competition.

Lake Region participates every year, and every year there is a new challenge. This year, the students had to build a robot that fits in a one-foot box, and weighs less than ten pounds. That robot had to be able to maneuver around a predesigned playing field, pick up balls, and place them in specific spots to get points.

The students had five minutes to get as many points as possible, and then try to balance the playing field, a see-saw-like wooden board, for bonus points.

In lieu of participating in the competition itself, the students presented their process to the school board, and demonstrated how the robot worked.

Sam explained how they built the robot. Four motors operate the small machine made of Legos, which sits on an aluminum frame between two tracks, which is how the robot gets around.

One motor powers the left track, and the other, the right. A third motor allows the bucket apparatus to move back and forth, tilting backwards the farther back it goes. The last motor makes the bucket go up and down.

The bucket has only one end, so the robot can dump the balls sideways into the desired spot on the playing field. A metal arm, located above the left side of the bucket, acts as a stop for half of the bucket, allowing the bucket to tilt as it's raised to release the balls.

Nikki described how the battery works and how it's maintained. The battery powers both the robot and the panel that controls it, but it must be monitored with an electric meter to ensure that it contains enough power.

If the meter reads 10 volts or less, it must be charged using a battery charger plugged into an outlet. A green light means the battery is fully charged, and red means that it is charging. A fuse must be used to protect the battery so that the fuse — not the battery or the robot and control panel — burns out if anything goes wrong.

Ricky made the control panel. There are four switches set on its wooden frame, one for each motor, and a dimmer to control the speed. The dimmer had to be set on its lowest setting to be able to perform the exercise successfully, Mr. Waring said. All of the team members had to memorize the complex wiring of the panel.

Summer outlined the game plan. In the playing field there is a five-point zone, on one side of the field, ten-point zones, and a 15-point zone, in the middle. Each ball is worth ten points and is multiplied by whichever zone it is placed into to count the points.

The team's plan was to place as many balls as possible in the middle, then balance the playing field for a 20 percent bonus on the ball score within the five-minute timeframe.

Ruminations

On the changing snack landscape

by Tena Starr

I spent the first seven years of life at a general store. We didn't live there; we lived on the other side of the driveway, then across the street.

The store was owned by my father's parents, Leo and Marie Daigle, and both of my parents worked there, so I was at the store in the day — along with cousins, as well as aunts and uncles not much older than me. Pepere and memere and the kids still at home lived above the store, although the kitchen was downstairs.

Some of us were occasionally there at night while my dad and his brothers watched hockey on TV in French. My cousin Sherie and I had no interest in French hockey so we (I) climbed to the top of a kitchen cupboard where we knew the key to the store was hidden, unlocked the door off the kitchen, and got into the store.

We were discouraged from being underfoot during the day.

We never took anything, but I well remember the thrill of creeping through the dark, wood-floored aisles, having the place to ourselves. We spent a lot of time looking at candy. I suppose it was like buying a lottery ticket and dreaming about what you'd do with all that money. We dreamed about what we'd take, if we dared, which we did not.

It was a crazy store. Perhaps I should say versatile. There was a room in the back where my father worked as a barber for a while, cutting hair and giving shaves. There was a massive, old wooden table where meat was cut up, and where my father once laid me down on my back and butterflied the slice in my upper lip where my cousin Mike had cut through it with a snow shovel.

Candy was behind the counter, not like now, where it's prominently displayed at a child's eye level. You had to ask whoever was working the counter, often my memere, who had 13 children, for a pack of Necco wafers or teaberry gum.

There was an ice cream freezer. It held ice cream in cartons and Popsicles. Maybe there were a few other frozen treats for kids, like a Rocket, which was vanilla ice cream with chocolate syrup laced through it. It was in a cylindrical cardboard container with a plastic stick, so you could push the ice cream up through it. I think they still exist.

What I have no recollection of is Doritos. Or anything like that.

There was an aisle with limited produce, then a dairy cooler. On the opposite side of the store there was hardware — nails and hammers and screws and bins of parts, the everyday stuff needed to fix things. It smelled like metal and oil and was the least interesting aisle.

In between were dry goods and canned goods, boxes of corn flakes, cans of corn, peas, tomatoes, sardines, and tuna fish. At the back was the meat counter.

And way in back of that, behind the store itself, there was a giant room filled with more hardware.

We cousins hung out there sometimes, playing hide and seek. No preschool in those days, not even kindergarten; we entertained ourselves running around between boxes of nails and playing in mud puddles.

There was a separate building that contained grain. But there was no aisle anywhere stacked with ketchup-flavored chips, Pringles, cool ranch flavored Doritos, and Tostitos.

Some of our most popular snacks have a bizarre history. Graham crackers, for instance.

We considered ourselves way lucky if we occasionally got a Coke, which came in a glass bottle then, or a Popsicle.

Here in rural Vermont, we managed to evade grocery store aisles devoted entirely to snack foods for a long time. Probably because no one could afford junk food. There are some, though not many, advantages to poverty.

I can measure the leap in packaged snacks easily enough.

There's my childhood, where there were virtually none: Potato chips and candy, like Sugar Daddys (my favorite), Necco wafers, and teaberry and mint gum. Despite daily access to a store, we didn't eat those things. I don't think many people did.

I have two children, one born in 1979, the other in 1999. In my daughter's childhood, SpaghettiOs made an appearance, as did macaroni and cheese in a box, but there still weren't aisles devoted to snack foods. Corn chips, potato chips, pretzels and a few other things were available.

Twenty years later, that had radically changed, and snack foods have proliferated.

According to the magazine bon appétit, the 1904 St. Louis World's Fair had a lot to do with it. That's where Dr. Pepper, waffle cones for ice cream, hot dogs, hamburgers, and cotton candy were initially popularized. America's first pizzeria was licensed in 1905.

Oreo cookies appeared in 1912 and were sold in glass jars for 25 cents a pound. They've turned out to be the most popular cookie in the world, despite initial dim prospects for its success. In the 1930s, Twinkies, Snickers, Tootsie Pops, Fritos, Ritz crackers, and Lay's potato chips all appeared during the Great Depression years. Go figure.

M&Ms were introduced in 1941 for patriotic reasons. There was a need for a heat resistant chocolate product to send to soldiers fighting in World War II. Tootsie Rolls were also added to soldiers' rations.

Some of our most popular snacks have a bizarre history. Graham crackers, for instance.

Sylvester Graham, a Presbyterian minister, believed that eating food that tastes good led to promiscuity. The man disapproved of sexual activity in general, much less promiscuity.

So the graham cracker, originally made of unbleached flour with coarsely ground bran and wheat germ (and no sugar), was part of his solution. His own diet, vegetarianism with limited dairy, and no white flour or white bread, stifled sexual urges, he believed.

Pretzels are generally considered the oldest snack food, first made in the sixth century. Popcorn is a rival, however, believed to have been made by Native Americans about 5,600 years ago.

Necco wafers were among the country's first manufactured candies, starting in 1947 by the New England Confectionery Company (thus NECCO).

There's no going backwards. Grocery stores fill aisles with snack foods because people buy them. They're quick, easy, and have nothing to recommend them in the way of nutrition.

I was a food Nazi when my daughter was little, and still have a book called Feed Me, I'm Yours. It's a very old book, but one I recommend for lots of reasons. Some of it reads dated, but much of it is terrific still. For one thing, it has recipes for play dough and Silly Putty, as well as food.

Here is a snack recipe I made so often when my children were younger that I once had it committed to memory.

Goodie balls

1/2 cup peanut butter
1/2 cup honey
1/2 cup cocoa powder
1 cup peanuts
1/2 cup sunflower seeds
1 cup toasted wheat germ
1 cup shredded coconut

Combine the peanut butter, honey, cocoa, peanuts, sunflower seeds and wheat germ. Mix well. Roll into balls (whatever size you want). Roll the balls in the flakes of coconut.

Gordon James Samson, 93, of Newport, and formerly of Island Pond, died in Lebanon, New Hampshire, on January 16, 2016.

He was born on the family farm on Meadow Street in Island Pond to Archie and Gertrude (Paterson) Samson on April 12, 1922.

Mr. Samson received his education in Island Pond and then went on to work for the state highway department caring for the highway between Island Pond and Bloomfield.

On November 11, 1942, he went to Portland, Maine, to enlist in the Navy. He was sent to the Navy Recruiting Station in Newport, Rhode Island. He was then assigned to the battleship U.S.S. Iowa. This was a new battleship at the time and was the lead ship of the U.S. Navy and one of the most powerful and fastest of its class. She was launched on August 27, 1942, and was commissioned on Washington's Birthday, February 22, 1943. She was 990 feet long and 108 feet wide. She was built to go through the Panama Canal. One incident that Mr. Samson enjoyed talking about was from November 12, 1943, when the battleship took President Roosevelt and his party to North Africa to the Teheran Conference to meet Joseph Stalin and Winston Churchill, always speaking of the round about way they had to do this for the President's safety. This battleship was the only one with a bathtub put in especially for President Roosevelt. The U.S.S. Iowa earned nine battleship stars for World War II service and two for Korean service.

After being discharged from the Navy, Mr. Samson went back to work for the state highway department. He married Thora Rivers in 1947. In 1950 he went to work for the Canadian National Railway's Grand Trunk division. He worked in the shop servicing the engines. While doing this he decided that he wanted to be a fireman and was transferred to Montreal, Quebec, in 1955.

He was often called back to Portland, Maine, in the fall to cover jobs when other men were on vacation. He was promoted to engineer in 1961. In 1972, he was transferred to Portland, and in 1978 he was called back to Island Pond.

He and his wife moved to Derby. Mr. Samson worked from Island Pond to Portland until he retired in 1987 with 37 years of service.

He enjoyed his railroad life. Anyone who visited him at the Bel-Aire Center in Newport saw his wall covered with pictures and clippings of his railroad and Navy life.

Mr. Samson and his wife went to Vancouver and Victoria, British Columbia, by rail, and also drove to Prince Edward Islands and to Nova Scotia. After his retirement they went to two of his U.S.S. Iowa battleship reunions. One that he especially enjoyed was in Pascagoula, Mississippi, where there was a tour of the ship. He had forgotten how small his quarters were on the ship.

After retirement they bought a home in Newport, where he enjoyed his retirement years. He liked a good snowstorm where he could get out with his tractor and snow blower and clean out his neighbors' yards.

Due to declining health, in 2012, he went in to the Bel-Aire Center.

He was a life member of the American Legion Post #80 in Island Pond and a member of the U.S.S. Veterans Association.

He is survived by his wife of 68 years, Thora; and by his nieces and nephews: Lorraine Glasson, Maynard Rivers and his wife, Pam, Gary Rivers and his wife, Sheryl, Robert Rivers and his wife, Rita, Douglas Bumps, Jim Bumps and his wife, Chris, Elizabeth "Betsy" Bumps, and their families.

He was predeceased by his parents; his sisters: Elsie Bumps and her husband, Cecil, and Ethel Rivers and her husband, Edward; a brother-in-law, Gordon Rivers; two nephews: Bruce and Steve Rivers; and by his wife's parents, Coral and Grace Rivers.

A graveside service will take place in the spring at the Lakeside Cemetery in Island Pond, with full military honors. The date and time will be announced.

Memorial contributions may be marked in his name to the Pope Memorial Frontier Animal Shelter, 502 Strawberry Acres Road, Newport, Vermont 05855; or to the Bel-Aire activities fund, 35 Bel-Aire Drive, Newport, Vermont 05855.

Dr. Ralph N. Buck

Dr. Ralph N. Buck, 94, of Bellows Falls, formerly of Westminster, died on December 22, 2015, at Springfield Health and Rehab Center, after a brief illness.

Known as "Doc Buck," he was born in Glover to Dr. Percy and Grace (Dow) Buck. He attended school in Glover, Barton, and Vermont Junior College. Following his 1945 graduation from Tufts Dental School in Boston, Massachusetts, he served as a dentist in the U.S. Navy. In 1947, he acquired a dental practice in the Old Arms Block in Bellows Falls where he practiced for many years. He later built an office building in Westminster where he practiced until his retirement in 2007 at the age of 86.

After 60 years in dentistry, his last patient was his great-grandson John, who was then seven months old, having his first dental checkup.

Besides his love of his family, his interests included baseball and horses. He played ball in college and on several local teams in the area. It was at a ball game in Alstead, New Hampshire, that he met Signa Owens, whom he later married on November 20, 1948, and who predeceased him in 2012.

His early interest in horses was a throwback from his father, a country doctor who would visit his patients in northern Vermont by horse and sleigh when unpaved roads were impassable in the winter. Then on weekends there would be Sunday afternoon races through the streets of Glover, Barton, and Lyndonville. His love for "The Trotters" remained and over the years he owned, trained, and raced several of his own at many New England tracks and fairs. He was a presiding judge at the harness races at the Orleans County fair for over 50 years. We don't believe he missed one over the years — he loved fair time. He felt very lucky to have been able to see his two great-grandchildren, John and Payton, enjoy his favorite sports. "Old Pop" would be seen at almost every baseball and basketball game of John's and got to see Payton (who has acquired his love of horses) ride, show, and have a horse of her own. He enjoyed going to the senior center and had many nice friends at Riverview Apartments who would stop in and say "Hi" or to help out — to all of them, thank you! He was fortunate to have enjoyed his horses, good friends, good health, and his family over so many years. He was friendly, outgoing, and always on the go looking for something to do. Whether driving up to Bucky's shop to hang out or to Stickney's farm, his driving skills were always a little sketchy. It was fast, straight ahead, and no looking back. Luckily his white caddy was recognized and people would pull over and let him go by. At the age of 92, by popular demand, he did give up driving.

He was a member of the Moose, Legion, and Masons, and served on many local boards and committees in the area.

He is survived by his son Dr. Owen Buck and his wife, Donna, of Maine; his daughter Nancy Adams and her husband, Don, of Westminster; his grandchildren: Naval Chief Petty Officer Peter Buck of Washington, D.C., Samantha Sirois and her husband, Ben, of Maine, Buck Adams of Westminster, and Judd Adams of Weathersfield; his great-grandchildren: John Adams and Payton Adams; his nephew Ralph Vincent of Sutton; his niece Laurel Vincent of Danville; and by longtime friend and helper to both Signa and Ralph, Priscilla Parrott.

He was predeceased by his parents and sister Rachel Vincent.

There will be a service in the spring, date to be announced.

Memorial contributions in his name may be made to the Bellows Falls Senior Center, Westminster Cares, or Kurn Hattin Homes.

Stephen Craig Aldrich

Stephen Craig Aldrich of Brownington died on Wednesday, January 20, 2016, while in the caring hands of his immediate family. He fell asleep in death peacefully, and with dignity.

He was born on October 4, 1951, and raised in Brownington. He is survived by his wife, Linda, whom he married in 1970. They wasted no time starting a family, and in their marriage of 45 years, he was steadfast in his love, compassion, patience, and loyalty.

Mr. Aldrich had a long career in the field of construction. He was well respected for his vast knowledge in the many avenues of public infrastructure, road building, and all around problem solving in the dirt work and facilitation of projects, great and small. He was a loyal employee of Dan and Kory Scott through several stages of their construction business endeavors, having a working relationship that spanned 45 years. He was always grateful for having a good job to provide for his family, and in that he never wavered.

He will be missed for his calm and friendly demeanor, his trustworthiness, his wisdom, and his humor. He taught his children by example the importance of humility, respect, generosity, and thinking before you speak. He enjoyed hard work, loved a challenge, and made himself a friend to many. His closest lifelong friends were Rodney Beal and Jerry Fitz.

His love for hunting, and knack for shooting on the wing, were overshadowed only by his love for fishing.

Those that knew Stephen Aldrich will understand that his accomplishments, reputation, and fine persona cannot be summed up in so few words.

He is survived by his siblings: his brother Michael and his wife, Claire, of Isle La Motte, his sister Gail and her husband, Timothy McKenna, of Jericho, his sister-in-law Neta Aldrich of East Charleston, and his sister-in-law Lynn Beal of Glover; his wife's siblings from Connecticut: Michael Brown, William Brown and his wife, Pat, Nancy and her husband, William Denny; his mother-in-law, Alma Brown; his daughter Katie and her husband, Matthew Hadvab, of Brownington; his son Roderic and his wife, Christine, of Brownington; his grandchildren: Kaleigh and her husband, Jordan Noyes, Spencer Hadvab, Carter Aldrich, and Bryce Aldrich; his step-grandchildren: Troy and Natalie Norton; and his great-grandchildren: Parker and Greyson Noyes. He had an incredible fondness of them all, and loved them each for their individual qualities.

He was predeceased by his mother, Marion, in 2015; his father, Roderic, in 1999; his brother John in 2003; and by his brother-in-law Rodney Beal in 2014.

Please join his family as they reflect on his life and their love for him on Saturday, January 30, at 1 p.m. Services will be held at the Newport City Motel conference room, 444 East Main Street in Newport.

Instead of flowers, please send donations to Leslie Lockridge's Oncology Caring Patient Fund, P.O. Box 838, Newport, Vermont 05855.

Lois Bennett

Lois Bennett, 89, of Brownington, died on January 19, 2016, at the Union House in Glover, where she more recently resided.

She was born at Hovey Sanitarium in Barton, on March 27, 1926. She was the youngest child of John and Effie (Crawford) Hancock.

After the death of her mother in 1937, she went to New England Kurn Hattin Home in Saxtons River, and then spent a year at Bellows Falls High School. The last three years she lived with a loving family in South Deerfield, Massachusetts, as a mother's helper and she later graduated from Deerfield High School.

With a shortage of nurses due to World War II, the government established the United States Cadet Nurse Corps for training young ladies in their three-year program. She entered this program and graduated from Brockton Hospital School of Nursing in 1947 and worked part time while raising her family.

In 1949 she married Norman A. Bennett, who predeceased her in 1989.

Funeral services were held on January 23, in Newport.

Seed swap February 2

Are visions of crisp green lettuce, rainbow stripes of tomatoes, the perfect tender bean, and exotic picotee flowers dancing in your head? Before gardeners place their seed orders, they should come to the seed swap at the Greensboro Free Library on Tuesday, February 2 at 6:30 p.m. People can bring seeds they have saved from their own gardens, or extras that can be shared.

The group will talk about seed saving, favorite varieties, and growing successes and failures. Bring questions, experiences, and gardening advice. Leftover seeds will be available on the following Thursday at the Hardwick community dinner at the United Church in Hardwick from noon to 1 p.m.

This is a free event organized by the Swap Sisters. The Swap Sisters hold seasonal events to share information and resources about growing and preserving food within the community. Sharing seeds and learning more about saving them is the beginning and the end of the yearlong cycle that also includes a plant swap in June, a day of workshops related to food preservation in September, and a harvest swap in November. The Swap Sisters believe in the power of homegrown solutions when facing big corporate-created crises, and seek to foster local independence based on neighborly interdependence. Save a seed, plant a seed, share a seed.

For more information, e-mail swapsisters@gmail.com or call 755-6336. — from the Swap Sisters.

10 Tips for an Efficient Kitchen

Chances are pretty good that we will always require a convenient place to store, prepare and cook our food. That place is the kitchen, and following are several ideas to make yours more efficient:

LIGHTING — This is very important, and, in general, more is better than less. If you don't have adequate lighting, try adding lighting under the cabinets or using higher wattage bulbs.

HARD FLOORING — Both wood and tile are more hygienic and easier to clean up.

OUTLETS — You shouldn't need to use extension cords in the kitchen. A well-designed kitchen will have outlets installed about every three feet.

CLEAR THE CLUTTER — Throw away or donate any items you know you won't use. By getting rid of old and unused spices, food and beaten up pots and pans, you'll make room for the stuff you actually use. The same goes for counter space.

CLEAN — Empty out all drawers and cabinets at least once a year and wash them with warm, soapy water. Replace with new liners if you use them.

ZONES & STORAGE — Create a kitchen triangle with designated zones for various tasks. For example, you may like to chop vegetables near the sink, or mix ingredients on the center isle. Whatever the case, choose a zone, then store the utensils you'll need for those tasks in the storage areas nearby. For example, pots and pans should be near the stove, while your Christmas plates could probably be stored on the top shelf.

FOOD STORAGE — Similar to above, everyday foods, like cereal or bread, should be in an easily-accessed spot. If you have kids, don't make them climb on the counters if there's a cupboard or drawer at a lower level.

CUTLERY TRAYS — Simple trays make it easy to organize your daily utensils and maximize drawer space.

SINKS — If you do a lot of cooking (preparation), it may be wise to invest in a sink that fits your needs; e.g., single, double, deep, stainless steel.

FAUCETS — A person who hand washes large pots and pans will want a different type of faucet than someone who rarely goes in the kitchen. If you like to cook, get a faucet that makes cleanup easier.

At Lake Region

Team scored far more points than TASC winners

The strategy was also to have the balls come to the robot, rather than bring the robot to the balls. They did that by taking advantage of the see-saw-like playing field and tipping the balance to make the balls roll into the lowered bucket, rather than going to pick up the balls. That enabled the operator to pick up many balls at once to get as many points as fast as possible.

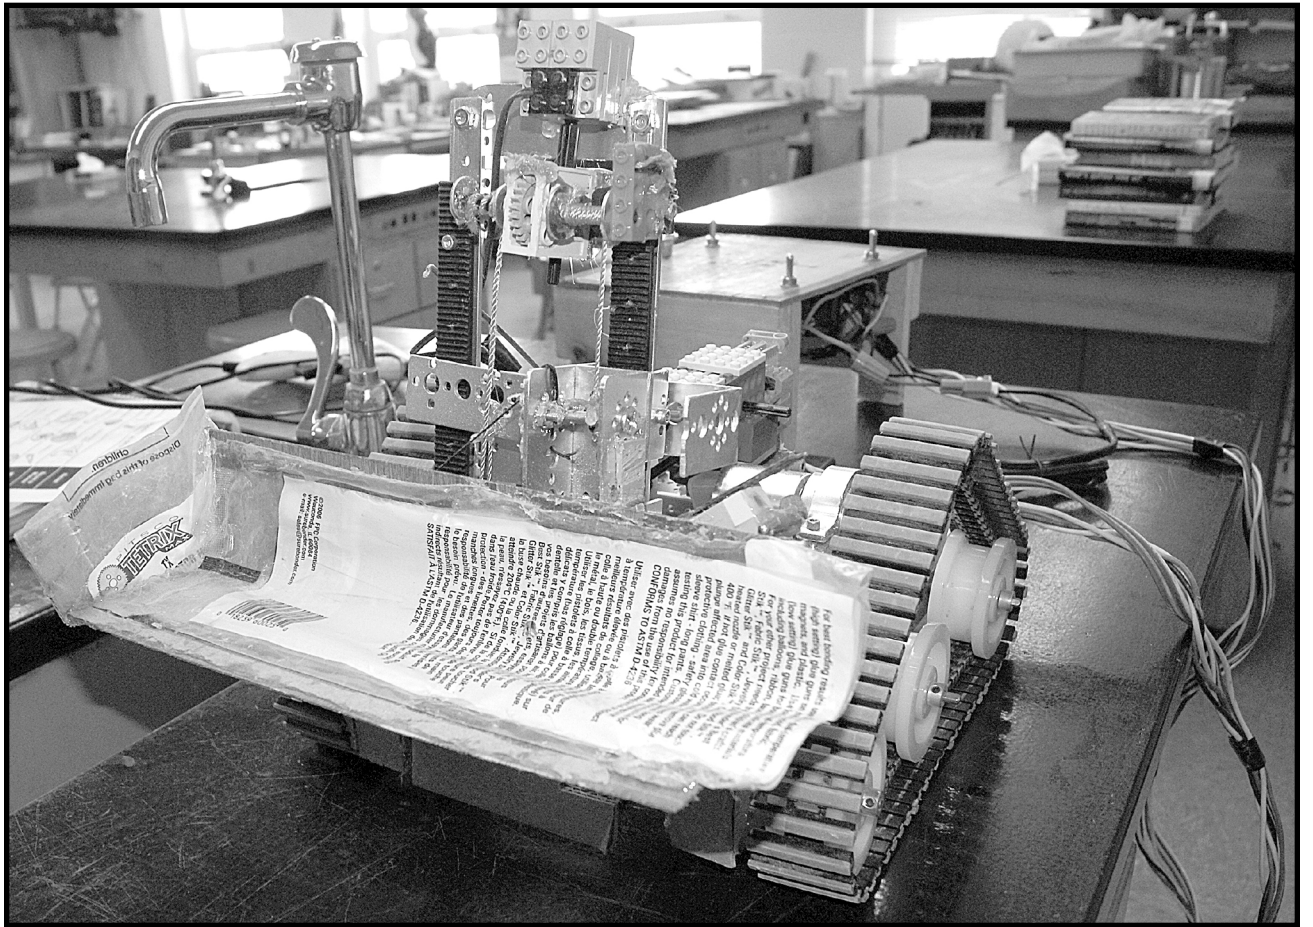

Denver, who was also the operator for the demonstration to the school board, discussed the problems the team encountered along the way. For example, getting the bucket to move up and down was difficult. They started by using gears, but the bucket was too heavy, and the gears wouldn't hold. The team had to devise a pulley system instead.

Following their game plan, the team managed to get 4,200 points, far more than the top scoring team at the November 2015 TASC competition, which received 2,640 points.

Denver made controlling the robot and picking up the balls look easy, but it was not.

Mr. Messier got to play with the robot at the school board meeting at the students' urging, but had some trouble picking up the balls in the playing field.

"I just had to get used to the toggles," he said.

Lake Region students built this robot, a combination bulldozer, forklift, and bucket loader.

He had no trouble maneuvering the robot down the corridors during the parent conference meeting.

"It's easy to imagine something, but it's hard to make something fit your imagination," Mr. Waring said about what his students learned from the process.

Designing the robot took many brainstorming sessions, lots of communication, and troubleshooting.

The students learned to express themselves so others could understand them, and to listen carefully when spoken to. They learned about teamwork, and following through on developing an idea, he said.

"The willingness to focus on what isn't working is a tough skill for kids," he said about troubleshooting.

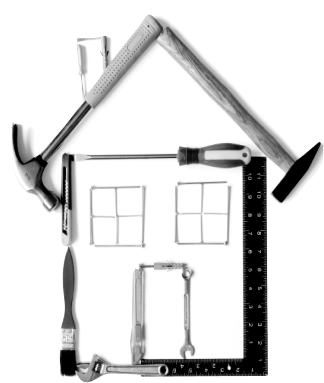

The students learned engineering concepts that enabled them to express their ideas appropriately, and how to speak in public.

"I was very impressed with the work," Mr. Messier said. "That task was incredible. You could really see the pride and the ownership. There was some phenomenal work there."

contact Nathalie Gagnon-Joseph at natgajo@bartonchronicle.com

The robot controller had four switches and a dimmer control mounted onto a wooden frame, made by Ricky Ferland.

A weekend birthday

Yours from the Perimeter

by Paul Lefebvre

The other night after being away a few days I drove home by the light of the moon. I don't remember the first time I turned off the headlights while driving a back road on a moonlit winter night. I do remember feeling I was getting away with something, as the road was empty and what few houses scattered here and there were dark and unoccupied.

I say houses, but 40 years ago most were either camps or seasonal homes with unplowed dooryards once the holiday season had ended. Driving by them in the stillness and the light of a full moon made me feel as if I was in and part of a place unlike any other.

Since then, the road has grown up. There are houses occupied year-round, and there is an occasional late-night light in a window overlooking the space between the trees. What hasn't changed is the stillness of a wooded land that feels more like a frontier when driving a country road lit only by the moon.

Once I passed Beck Pond, I switched the headlights back on out of curiosity to watch the road for tracks. There were a few, mostly rabbit, but as I neared the house, the tracks got bigger. One set, likely belonging to a moose, went up the bank and appeared to be headed across the front yard before I lost them in the gathering darkness.

I was pleased to see Keith had been by to plow the driveway. Four days had passed since I'd been home, and having a plowed dooryard made the house seem more friendly, more lived-in, as if I hadn't been away at all. I walked through the door to a full woodbox and a warm stove, thanks to a well-banked fire by David, Rocky's brother, whose family lives a few miles down the road, near the south end of Center Pond.

I feed more wood into the stove and leave the damper open until the fire takes off and the stove starts to huff and puff like the old steam locomotives used to do, climbing the grade from Island Pond to the Summit. The firewood this year smells exceptionally sweet when it starts to burn. Culled from a sugar bush two years ago, it is so dry that within the length of space between the woodbox and the stove the floor is littered with chips and pieces of bark, small but big enough to hurt when you step on them in your stocking feet. I sweep up the chips, damper down the stove, and climb the stairs to bed. The moon lights the way.

The next morning, sitting close to the stove, I admire how much wood remains in the woodshed for this time of year. Only a little better than two rows burned and I still have five-and-a-half left, plus one more that's stacked outside covered with tin in a row twice as long as those running back-to-back inside the woodshed. For my seventy-first birthday I am wood rich with two new books to read, thanks to Rose.

Beck Pond Road in the morning can be as quiet as the Center Pond Road is at night. A lack of snow — only a foot or so in the woods — has thinned the number of snowmobilers who typically use the road as a connecting spur to their trail over Packard Mountain. While going for a walk after filling the woodbox I saw the big tracks again going up the embankment toward the house. Surprisingly, they didn't lead anywhere. Instead, it seems as if the moose had changed its mind and turned around after gaining the yard. Strange, as what spooks a moose in the dead of winter?

There are human tracks in the road as well. I suspect John L. and his wife have been walking their dog as far as the turn-around, where the road narrows and changes its classification to little more than a road the town is only obliged to keep passable during the summer or snow-free months. Below the house the deer have been feeding on dropped apples under the snow. Their tracks lead in and out of the swamp that borders the north side of the pond.

The morning air makes for a brisk walk but the outlet brook from Beck Pond, which passes under the road that bears its name, is still open and running free. It's a different story for the pond, which seen from the road is capped with ice and snow. The pond is too small to permit ice fishing, but judging from the number of ice shanties I've seen on frozen bodies of water across the Kingdom, you could probably ski across it without breaking through.

Down the road beyond the pond, I see a fellow walking toward me with his dog. Its floppy ears and markings remind me of a bird dog. The guy is unknown to me but as soon as the dog starts running toward me, he shouts out reassurances the dog is friendly and only wants to play. It's no bother; I've had a few dogs myself.

"Hey pup," I say as he gets into petting distance. "You a good dog?"

The owner and I exchange morning salutations and nothing more. Among strangers there can be an expectation of privacy to a morning walk on an empty road; an expectation one can respect without being unfriendly or asocial. But by the time I reach the end of the road and turn around, I am telling myself: Come spring I am going to have another dog.

At the junction where a logging road goes over Packard Mountain, the dog guy and I go by one another again and offer the same brief exchanges of cordiality. Moments later a snowmobiler heading toward us comes to an abrupt stop. He wants to know the way to Hawk Rock. I point to the logging road and he gaily roars off.

Back at the house a pair of blue jays pick through the snow on the woodshed roof in hopes of finding a crust of bread. They fly off when I arrive, returning when I fill the bird feeder. Only the call of the chickadees breaks the silence.

Rose comes by and by mid-afternoon we are on our way to town to buy the makings for a birthday supper. We make a tour out of it and I am reminded of a pair of friends who spend holidays like Christmas riding around the North County until they come to a restaurant that catches their eye. Not us. We have a deal for this occasion: she buys, I cook.

After the meal we make plans to snowshoe the next day into camp. Sunday morning starts off under a full sun that recedes further behind the clouds as the day grows longer. A logger cutting cedar shuts off his saw as we approach with snowshoes in hand. When I tell him where we are going, he advises I should start a fire and stay awhile in camp.

"Not today," I tell him. "We're just on tour."

At camp Rose stays outside while I take off my snowshoes and unlock the door. When I come out, she sees I am carrying a pair of boots that I left behind when we broke camp after deer season.

"I thought you said we were going on tour, but we were really on a mission," she says, eyeing the boots that I have tied together by their shoelaces. "Are we going back the same way?"
