At the Newport Town School Sixth-graders gone to the dogs (and cats)

by Elizabeth Trail

NEWPORT CENTER — The sixth-grade class at Newport Town School won't have much time to use the iPads their class project earned for the school before they move on to junior high. But they can be proud that they have left a legacy to next year's students, and to the ones who come after them.

The school won a grant for 20 iPads and a charging cart from the Vermont State Lottery for a project designed to help the animals at the Pope Memorial Frontier Animal Shelter in Orleans. The iPads were presented to the school at a ceremony on June 1.

The application for the Educate/Innovate Grant from the state lottery called for either a service project, or a demonstration of how to use technology to solve a real world problem.

The youngsters in Newport Center did both. They cleaned the animal shelter. They did a drive to collect food, toys, and other things that shelter animals need, like shampoo, toys, and kitty litter.

And they took photos of the cats and dogs with an iPad, made posters, and hung them up around town in hopes of finding more homes for pets.

In fact, as a display in the hallway outside their classroom says, the sixth-grade class has gone to cats (and dogs.)

It's a passion the whole school seems to share. In fact, the first-grade class topped the school in collecting food for shelter pets.

"Raise your hand if you love animals," school guidance counselor Sarah Feldman said at the morning assembly at the school last week where Greg Smith, director of the Vermont State Lottery, and Peter Drescher from the state Agency of Education came to present the iPads to the school.

Every child in the room waved a hand enthusiastically.

"Through our project," Ms. Feldman said, "we found out that our school really cares about animals."

The sixth-graders at Newport Town School donned cat ears to have their pictures taken for the inside of their thank-you note to the Vermont State Lottery. A poster outside their classroom announced that the sixth grade had gone to the cats and dogs. Their project this year was to take photos of the shelter pets and make posters to help them get adopted. Next year, with the new iPads, the sixth-grade class will be able to make and edit videos, write descriptions of the pets for a website, learn to use marketing software, and compare data to see if their work is helping pets find homes.

Inside the handmade thank-you card the sixth-graders gave to Mr. Smith on behalf of the school are photos of themselves wearing cat ears, just like the photos on the display outside their classroom.

"Thank you for the iPads you have donated," the card says. "This school can learn easier now thanks to the iPads. Also you let the sixth grade leave a legacy."

"Raise your hand if you like computers," Ms. Feldman said.

Every child raised a hand to that one, too.

Newport Town School's grant proposal was one of 50 submitted to the Vermont State Lottery for consideration. It's the third school to be awarded a cart of iPads through the Educate/Innovate program.

"You put forth an excellent proposal," Mr. Smith said.

One of the things that made Newport Town School's proposal stand out was that the students themselves had identified a problem in the community and decided on a plan to solve it, he said.

Next year's sixth-graders will use the new iPads to help the animal shelter streamline and promote pet adoptions, said Mr. Drescher.

The project will involve many areas of study as students produce and edit videos and write descriptions of the pets for the shelter's website.

Later, the students will collect data and compare it to previous shelter adoption statistics to see whether their work has made a difference.

"And even though the sixth-graders earned the iPads, and they'll be using them for this project, every class and grade will get a chance to use them," Mr. Smith said.

Back in their classroom after the ceremony, the students sat in a circle to talk about what it means to leave a legacy.

Newport Town School uses a model called "the responsive classroom" to teach children to be responsible, involved citizens in their school community and beyond. Among many things, that means they meet in a circle in their classrooms every morning to talk.

That day, the sixth-graders were joined by some younger children to help everyone imagine what their gift to the school was going to mean to those who would use the computers in the future.

"You have always been a very special class to me," teacher Jule Meunier said. "I will think of you every time I see students using them in the future. That's your legacy."

Although iPads in the classroom have a lot of educational benefits, there is the potential for problems, too. Computers can be distracting if

Ruminations

How to drag yourself out of the kitchen rut

by Joseph Gresser

Last week I talked about finding recipes that match the contents of my larder and also the cookbooks I turn to first when I want to try something I've tasted but never made.

I probably should have mentioned another book that I don't use, but which I have given as a gift to young friends who are starting out on their own. That's Mark Bittman's How To Cook Everything.

The idea of this cookbook goes beyond providing recipes to discuss techniques and substitutions. It offers the kind of information that anyone who has knocked around in a kitchen for a few decades has gained.

What's nice about Mr. Bittman's book is that it eliminates the miserable culinary failures that pave the self-taught path.

The success of his first volume has encouraged Mr. Bittman to churn out a number of sequels, including one focused on vegetarian cuisine. I'm sure they're all fine, but I think the first book should be plenty for most kitchen bookshelves.

Cookbooks are great helps when you know what you want to cook, but few drag you out of your kitchen rut and point you into completely unfamiliar territory.

For that I look elsewhere. The New York Times has had a remarkable staff of food writers for the past 50 years, at least. While the earlier portion of that time focused on classic cuisines, particularly French and Italian, the past 25 years or so have seen a marked broadening of the horizons covered in the paper's food columns.

Mr. Bittman wrote for the Times, as did Molly O'Neil whose books I discussed in the last issue of the Chronicle. It would be a major injustice to overlook another alumna of the paper who now spends the warmer part of the year in Orleans County, Marion Burros.

In addition to clipping recipes from the Times, (actually I just save them on my computer nowadays, but I do have some files of old clippings kicking around) I subscribe to a pair of food magazines.

One, Cook's Illustrated, is very well known. The other, Lucky Peach, is less so, but worthy of the attention of anyone who likes cooking and has a sense of adventure.

Cook's Illustrated was the brainchild of Christopher Kimball, who appears not to be an advocate of off-trail cooking. He set up an operation in Boston that he called America's Test Kitchen. That name has been used in television and radio shows that sprang from the magazine.

The idea of the test kitchen is to come up with the correct way to make any dish.

In general, Cook's Illustrated has a fairly conservative range. The most recent issue includes recipes for chicken tacos, grilled paella, vegetable slaws, and ratatouille. It also provides hints on grilling onions, judging when various foods are done, and grilling a juicy steak.

A half year's accumulation of cooking magazines.

Just in case the last item has created unbearable suspense, the trick is to take a thick-cut steak out of the freezer and throw it onto the grill.

Cook's Illustrated also rates kitchen equipment such as knives and food processors. Like Consumer Reports, on which it seems to be modeled, Cook's Illustrated doesn't accept advertising and, in my experience its reviews tend to be quite good.

On the other hand, I do find the magazine's quest for perfection to be a bit wearing sometimes. Its process includes having panels of trained tasters on hand to sample and rate every dish, and the text that accompanies each recipe has a "Perils of Pauline" feel to it.

A writer will retell the struggle to create a simplified version of a complicated dish. At every turn the tasters will find flaws in the approach until, at last, the cook has an inspiration and comes up with a recipe that fully satisfies the panel.

I've pretty much given up reading the articles, but not the sidebars that discuss the science of food preparation. Those short articles can be both fascinating and useful.

Cook's Illustrated recipes can be a bit fussy, but when they're on their game, the authors' work can't be beat. I swear by the magazine's yeasted waffles, and its pie crust recipe — which substitutes cold vodka for half the water — is perfect.

Lucky Peach is exactly the opposite, a goofy collection curated by David Chang of the New York City restaurant Momofuku Noodle Bar and a host of others in New York and other cities. (He says the name Momofuku means lucky peach in Japanese.)

Mr. Chang started out by creating his own ramen style noodles. It's not surprising, then, that his sense of food is quite informal. Each of Lucky Peach's quarterly issues focusses on a different theme and includes memories, interviews, and fiction around the theme.

Street food obviously fascinates the staff. The last issue showed an anthropomorphic taco squaring off against a semi-human slice of pizza. The current issue is devoted to pho, a Vietnamese specialty combining noodles, meat, and vegetables in a bowl of broth.

At some point this summer I plan to devote myself to a pho feast, but my garden will have to be in full flourish before I have everything I need to do it justice.

Every issue of Lucky Peach has a kind of showdown between chefs, as three cooks present their take on a dish related to the issue's theme.

For instance, the winter 2015 issue was devoted to breakfast foods, and the showdown was between chefs, each of whom had his or her own take on a morning dish of corn.

Paul Carmichael, a chef who hails from Barbados, offered his version of an African breakfast dish. It's both easy to make and far more adventurous than anything one would be likely to find in another cooking magazine.

Cornmeal pap

- 1 vanilla bean
- 2 1/2 cups water
- 1/2 cup finely ground cornmeal
- 3-inch stick of cinnamon
- 1/4 teaspoon kosher salt
- 1 bay leaf
- 1/2 cup coconut milk
- 1/2 cup evaporated milk
- 1/2 cup condensed milk
- 1/4 teaspoon ground nutmeg
- 1 tablespoon butter (optional)

Split the vanilla bean and scrape out all the seeds. In a medium bowl, combine the vanilla innards with 2 cups of water. Set aside.

In a separate bowl, mix the remaining 1/2 cup of water with the cornmeal to make a thick slurry.

Pour the vanilla water into a medium pot. Add the cinnamon, salt, and bay leaf, and bring to a boil. Slowly pour in the cornmeal slurry, whisking vigorously until the mixture is smooth. Lower the heat and simmer, uncovered, for 25 minutes, whisking every 5 minutes. Be careful not to let the bottom scorch. Add a bit of water, if needed, to loosen up the mixture.

Stir in the coconut milk, evaporated milk, condensed milk, and nutmeg. If you prefer the pap to be sweeter, you can add more condensed milk to the mixture. Bring back up to a simmer, then remove from heat. Whisk in the butter, if using, and serve.

Beware of reverse cabin fever

Yours from the Perimeter

by Paul Lefebvre

I believe I've come down with a case of reverse cabin fever. I don't know what else to call it; I've never had it before.

Throughout most of my 70 years I've acquainted cabin fever with a seasonal type of mental disorder that stems from being cooped up inside a house because it's just too nasty, too cold, too much of everything wet and disagreeable to spend any time outside. In other words, nowhere to go and nothing to do but fend off the feeling the world is closing in around you.

The disorder this time around is just the reverse. Too much to do, too many spots to check, too many lists that go unattended and unfulfilled. Everywhere I turn the world is virtually rushing through my door, and rather than the sweet calls of the song birds, nature has become something akin to that psychotic plant with growing pains that keeps crying: "Feed me. Feed me."

I don't know when it started or where I caught it, if that's the way to describe a disorder that rises like the mist as soon as I get up in the morning. I may have caught it from my colleagues in the Legislature who were in a mad rush to get something done before the adjournment gavel fell and April catapulted into May. Little did I realize the immediate, attending risk: that the rush would follow me home.

Still, like most fevers, its arrival came unannounced — a surprise cloaked in the greening of the grass or the budding of the trees. One moment the air was fresh, the sky was blue and then, just like that, one list after another started appearing on the kitchen table. Like an onrushing cloud of black flies, things to do were multiplying by the hour. Outside or in, it didn't make any difference. There was no escape and before I knew it, a virulent strain of reverse cabin fever was causing my world to spin at warp speed and threatening to spill out of control.

There are some who believe my disorder is neither unusual nor unique for this time of year. Rather they choose to believe it is something caused by a common insect bite. "You know what's wrong with you? You've been bitten by the homeowner's bug," they'll say with the smugness of a know-it-all who spends nearly all his summer waking hours on a riding lawn mower.

I'm not convinced. I never had or drove a riding mower, but I've owned a house since the early seventies. And while it's true I've wandered a bit during the years, I've never been seized by an impatient urge like what I'm feeling now: To do something, anything as long as it's in the here and now. No fair daydreaming or procrastinating. Get immediately busy and right away, while it's still daylight.

Frankly, whatever I have may have reached full-blown proportions even as I write. I offer this observation cautiously, knowing I've already cleaned out the shed, stacked two loads of firewood, cleaned the chimney, made repeated trips to the recycling center, mowed the lawn twice, put the screened-in porch back in working order, washed the windows inside and out, and swept, vacuumed, and scrubbed various spots on the kitchen floor.

"Time for a union break," I can hear Rocky saying.

Even Rose, who has known me for a much shorter time than Rocky, realized that my clock might be wound too tight. "Now I know why your friends call you Fever," she said, after hearing me reel off a day's accomplishments.

But I knew that reverse or post cabin fever was still coursing through my body when I dove headlong into two projects that really didn't require my attention. The first one entailed cutting down a bull size spruce tree on the corner of my lawn, whose needles have been dropping like fleas. For years I deferred dealing with it, suspecting it was too much tree for a fellow with my deranged sensibilities with a chainsaw.

When it comes to lumberjacking, I'm a bear at limbing or bucking up firewood. Not so good, though, at bringing a tree down where I want it to land. In fact, during the one year I spent working in the woods, I hung so many trees up that no one would venture onto my lot out of fear a stiff wind might topple a leaner and bring the full brunt of a tree still hanging down on his or her head.

Such a shortcoming was very much in mind when I ran into Fast Eddy in town a few days before the Memorial Day Parade.

"When are we going to try out that new crossbow?" he said, talking to me out the window of his truck.

"Well first I need to pick up some arrows. Or, what do you call them, bolts?" I said.

"Not a problem, I got some," he said. "What are you doing later this week?"

"Not much, but first I need a hand taking down that dead spruce tree next to my house."

"When do you want to do it?" he said. "I've got a sharp chain saw."

The tree measured 28 inches on the stump and ran about 50-55 feet in height. With help from a young fellow that Eddy brought along, it took nearly half a day to limb and block the tree into manageable, moveable lengths.

"It's a good thing you brought that young guy on board, or we would still be at it," I told him. "You see him carrying those big blocks on his shoulder? What do I owe you?"

"Oh just give me some gas money,"

I gave him a 50-dollar bill I had tucked away in a book. "That's more than enough," he said. "I'll be back next week with my target."

Eddy's target resembles a tightly overstuffed beanbag that has bull's-eyes on one side and the outline of a big game animal on the other, which shows the location of all the vital organs. We never got to shoot at it, as the day he returned I had my hands full with a newly acquired seven-week-old puppy.

"You certainly know how to complicate your life," wrote Calamity in an e-mail inquiring if I was still coming to Burlington for the jazz festival.

I named the puppy Stringer, and he trails behind me as I go from one chore to another. There are still some small cedar trees in the backyard I need to thin, and the brush pile from the big spruce needs to be burned before I can get the ground ready to plant a few apple trees. The spring box up the hill still needs to be checked, and if I don't add some gravel to the driveway pretty soon, I'm going to be in trouble.

Eddy, bless his heart, left his target along with a few bolts, which I plan to try out one of these days — once, that is, my reverse cabin fever starts to subside. But first I've got to get a better handle on how to house break a puppy.

In Memoriam

Arlene M. Young

May 17, 1930 ~ June 5, 2008

I'll plant and water, sow and weed
Til not an inch of earth shows brown,
And take a vow of each small seed
To grow to greenness and renown:
And then some day you'll pass my way,
See gold and crimson, bell and star,
And catch my garden's soul, and say:
"How sweet these cottage gardens are."

Minimize fire and carbon monoxide risks with working alarms

Vermont Division of Fire Safety Director Michael Desrochers kindly reminds Vermonters to have properly installed and maintained smoke and carbon monoxide alarms in their homes. So far in 2016, five Vermonters have been killed in fires and two more have died as a result of accidental carbon monoxide poisoning.

“Smoke alarms, when properly installed and maintained, can provide you the necessary early warning needed to escape a life threatening situation,” Mr. Desrochers said. Smoke alarms should be installed outside the immediate vicinity of sleeping rooms, in each sleeping room, and on each floor of the home — including the basement. Never re-enter a burning home — get out, stay out, and call 911.

Carbon monoxide is a colorless, odorless, tasteless, poisonous gas that is not detectable without carbon monoxide alarms. There are many potential sources of carbon monoxide. The most common sources are heating appliances, wood burning stoves, generators, automobiles, gas cooking appliances, barbecue grills (charcoal and propane), gas ranges, and gas refrigerators. Carbon monoxide alarms can be installed in the same location as smoke alarms. If a carbon monoxide alarm activates, immediately leave the house, call 911, and let the fire department mitigate the hazard.

For more safety information, please visit firesafety.vermont.gov. — from the Vermont Division of Fire Safety.

What Is Your Shrubbery Saying About Your Home?

Unkempt shrubbery and greenery can give a potential home buyer the impression that your home has been neglected. Even if they don't outright notice it, there's a good chance it left a negative impression at some level.

To make sure this doesn't happen to you, keep your shrubs and other greenery trimmed and well-shaped so the overall impression you make is that your yard and home have been well maintained. For an eye-pleasing effect, try to groom the shrubbery so it visually lines up with other plants, landscaping, and other yard decorations.

If your shrubbery and greenery becomes so overwhelming that it makes entering the home a challenge, or makes the interior of the home dark, you should consider removing it altogether. Oversized shrubbery and plants can dwarf the home and make it look smaller, and even create safety concerns.

You can probably spruce up your yard's shrubbery and greenery over the course of a single weekend, and you should do this. If you can't do it yourself, hire a professional to do it. They'll probably charge from $25 to $50 per hour, but this small investment will help get your home sold.

Just keep in mind an attractive and well-maintained property will get sold faster. And note that many buyers will not even consider a property that has obvious maintenance problems even before they make an offer. A little effort up front can make all the difference.

School has plan for preventing potential problems

kids use them for online gaming or social media sites.

The Newport Town School has a detailed plan for preventing potential problems before they can get started, said school technology coordinator Molly Kelly.

"First, we'll be doing a lot of pre-teaching before the iPads even come out," she said.

There will be rules about how the iPads are to be used — and how they are not to be used.

Red, yellow, and green cards — like traffic signals — will be displayed at the front of the classroom to show whether it's appropriate for students to be using the iPads at any given moment, Ms. Kelly said.

Red will mean "laptops off and out of sight." Yellow will mean "laptops turned face down on the desk." And green will mean that students are allowed to use the computers.

And because rules aren't always enough, student access to the Internet will be controlled by the North Country Supervisory Union's firewall. That means no Facebook, no Twitter, no Reddit, or any of dozens of popular Internet sites.

All of the software on the iPads will be installed by the school, Ms. Kelly said. So students can't put a favorite game on an iPad, for example.

"We teach them you only use the apps presented to you," she said.

But even more important, Ms. Kelly said, is the pre-teaching — and ongoing reminders as necessary — about responsible computer use that she and all of the classroom teachers will be doing.

"Our school has four guiding principles," Ms. Kelly said. "Safety, respect, acceptance, and responsibility.

"All of those principles also apply to computer use," she said. "The kids are really excited, but they know there will be limits."

Expectations are unified across the school, she said.

But perhaps the key thing that Ms. Kelly wants every child in the school to understand is that the iPads belong to the whole school — not just to the students using them at any given moment.

"We've gone over that your personal device is at home," she said. "The iPads here belong to everyone, and you have a chance to use them for a purpose."

As the morning circle time drew to a close, the sixth-graders and their younger classroom guests had a chance to pass one of the iPads around and look at it.

Actually getting a chance to use them is a little ways off, since Ms. Kelly has to install software and get the computers going. And the school year is almost over.

"I'm going to miss you guys so much next year," Ms. Meunier told her students. "But it feels good to me that this class is the one to have left these iPads to the school."

Kindergarteners learn about healthcare

North Country Hospital hosted its annual "Teddy Bear Clinic" in May.

Kindergarten classes from Orleans, Irasburg, Glover, Newport, Derby, St. Paul's and United Christian Academy brought their favorite stuffed animals in for a routine checkup.

The program, designed to familiarize children with the hospital and staff, is in its twenty-ninth year. The furry patients received a wellness workup including weight and a quick shot.

The children were given tours of the ambulance, met with emergency staff, and received a presentation on summertime safety from the emergency room staff.

"It is our intent that these children get to see that the hospital and the staff are here to help," said Ann Edgerley, RN. "We also want them to become familiar with the ambulances, and hospital surroundings. This way, if they ever have to visit the hospital, it will be a less scary experience for them."

The program is organized by emergency room nurse, Ms. Edgerley, and Director of Volunteers Merrilyn Barry.

"We love interacting with the kids and taking this opportunity to help them become a little less anxious about visiting the doctor," said Ms. Barry. — from North Country Hospital.

The Art House wins grant for after school program

The Vermont Women's Fund awarded The Art House in Craftsbury a $6,000 grant for its after-school guided art program, Studio Night Out.

Studio Night Out provides direct art experiences with teaching artists, community mentors, and peers. Started in 2014 for young women in Craftsbury, the program will open up to young men this fall.

"The best part about our program is that it is completely free," said Lily Dunbar of Craftsbury. "Like Craftsbury Academy and their free and reduced lunch rate, the goal of The Art House is to provide programs for young adults no matter their economic status."

In June, The Art House will display participants' work in the gallery.

NCUHS students raise and release salmon

For the past 15 years the North Country Union High School AP environmental science class has raised salmon to release in the Clyde River. The class raises an average of 75 landlocked Atlantic salmon per year.

This year the students successfully raised 83 fish and released them on May 24. When the fish are released they are about two and a half to three inches long. Raising salmon as these students did can help to repopulate endangered species, supplement natural stocks, and provide opportunities in areas that wouldn't support natural production.

Salmon come from the family salmoninae. Reproduction begins when the female first makes depressions in the sand. She then lays her eggs in the depressions and waits for the male to fertilize the eggs so she can cover them. Once the eggs hatch the young landlocked salmon will spend one to four years in a stream before migrating to a lake.

In the classroom, students were able to observe the first several months of the salmon's lives. Once they hatched, the students observed their behaviors.

"The salmon had little sacks on the bottom of their bellies that were full of stored nutrients," said student Katelynn Briere. "We were told that once these sacks were depleted, the fish would have to start eating, or else they would starve. We noticed that the young fish tended to stay at the bottom of the tank. Our contact from the Bald Hill Fish Culture Station, Christian Thompson, would tell us when to raise the temperature in the tank. Raising the temperature helped prompt the fish to move around."

As the fish matured, the students noted even more changes.

"It was interesting to learn about the different feeding patterns of the fish," said Lucca Abele. "As they got older we had to feed them more, about once every hour. This was surprising because at first we did not feed them at all."

"At the beginning of the year we did a lab on the water quality of the Clyde River," said Celina Patten. "I feel that this lab helped me understand the conditions that the fish were raised under. For instance, we had to be careful not to overfeed the fish, because overfeeding would deteriorate the water quality."

In fact, overfeeding fish in a tank can lead to high ammonia and nitrite levels as the uneaten food breaks down in the water. This makes the water toxic for the fish.

Now that the project is done, Anica Koontz Miller reflected on the process.

"It would be interesting to see the complete lifecycle of the fish, as opposed to the one or two phases we observed in the classroom," she said. "I would be interested to learn more about the final maturation stages of the fish, and the reproductive cycle."

The students' efforts were supported by the Bald Hill Fish Culture Station who provided the salmon for the class; Christian Thompson, the students' contact; and Deb, who helped feed the fish over holiday breaks. They would like to thank everyone who was helpful in making this a successful learning experience. — submitted by Katelynn Briere.
