

This movie is a comedy spoof of 300 and other popular movies and celebrities.

This movie is a parody of 300 and other popular films and celebrities. It is full of crude and sexual humor that may offend or disgust some viewers. The film is rated PG-13 for these reasons. Here are some of the content details: - Violence: The movie makes fun of violence by showing exaggerated and unrealistic scenes of characters being killed, injured, or abused. For example, babies are thrown away, children are attacked, and soldiers are stabbed, shot, beheaded, or beaten. The violence is meant to be funny, but some may find it disturbing or offensive. - Sex: The movie has many sexual jokes and references, as well as nudity and suggestive scenes. Meet the Spartans is a comedy film that makes fun of the movie 300, which was about a historical battle between Greeks and Persians. It stars Sean Maguire, Diedrich Bader, Kevin Sorbo, and Carmen Electra, among others.

It is rated PG-13 for crude and sexual humor, violence, and language. [1:24] The film has two versions: the theatrical cut and the unrated Pit of Death edition. Both versions have extra features such as trailers, featurettes, and audio tracks in English, Spanish, and French. The unrated version also has a trivia track and two games. It is available on DVD and Blu-ray Disc. If you enjoy spoofs, but want something more respectful and less vulgar, you might like Galaxy Quest or Shrek, which are also comedies that parody popular genres and characters. TIME magazine called this website one of the 50 coolest websites because it tells the truth. The film contains a lot of sexual content, such as: - A husband and wife moan loudly while he lifts her up and down (no sex This article is a parents guide for the movie Meet the Spartans, which is a parody of the movie 300. It contains many scenes of sexual content and nudity, as well as violence and gore. Some of the scenes are This article is a parents guide for the movie 'Meet the Spartans', a parody of the film '300'. It contains the following content warnings: SEX/NUDITY 6 - A man looks at a woman's chest, she reveals more skin, he jokes about having erectile dysfunction, and she admits having an infection (we see crabs on her underwear This article is a parents guide for the movie "Meet the Spartans", a parody of the film "300".

It contains some scenes of violence, gross humor, and sexual innuendo that may not be suitable for children. Here are some examples of the content: - A man hits another man in the face and breaks his nose. A woman gets a painful massage and the masseuse jumps on her back. - A woman turns into a monster and attacks a man This is a spoof movie that makes fun of many popular films and celebrities. It is not meant to be taken seriously, but it contains a lot of crude humor, violence, and sexual content. Here are some of the things you should know before watching it with your kids: - A baby ogre spews green slime on a man's face.

The film is rated PG-13 for these reasons. Here are some of the content details: - Violence: The movie makes fun of violence by showing exaggerated and unrealistic scenes of characters being killed, injured, or abused. For example, babies are thrown away, children are attacked, and soldiers are stabbed, shot, beheaded, or beaten. The violence is meant to be funny, but some may find it disturbing or offensive. - Sex: The movie has many sexual jokes and references, as well as nudity and suggestive scenes. Meet the Spartans is a comedy film that makes fun of the movie 300, which was about a historical battle between Greeks and Persians. It stars Sean Maguire, Diedrich Bader, Kevin Sorbo, and Carmen Electra, among others. It is rated PG-13 for crude and sexual humor, violence, and language. [1:24] The film has two versions: the theatrical cut and the unrated Pit of Death edition. Both versions have extra features such as trailers, featurettes, and audio tracks in English, Spanish, and French. The unrated version also has a trivia track and two games. It is available on DVD and Blu-ray Disc. If you enjoy spoofs, but want something more respectful and less vulgar, you might like Galaxy Quest or Shrek, which are also comedies that parody popular genres and characters. TIME magazine called this website one of the 50 coolest websites because it tells the truth. The film contains a lot of sexual content, such as: - A husband and wife moan loudly while he lifts her up and down (no sex This article is a parents guide for the movie Meet the Spartans, which is a parody of the movie 300. It contains many scenes of sexual content and nudity, as well as violence and gore. Some of the scenes are This article is a parents guide for the movie 'Meet the Spartans', a parody of the film '300'. It contains the following content warnings: SEX/NUDITY 6 - A man looks at a woman's chest, she reveals more skin, he jokes about having erectile dysfunction, and she admits having an infection (we see crabs on her underwear This article is a parents guide for the movie "Meet the Spartans", a parody of the film "300". It contains some scenes of violence, gross humor, and sexual innuendo that may not be suitable for children.

Here are some examples of the content: - A man hits another man in the face and breaks his nose. A woman gets a painful massage and the masseuse jumps on her back. - A woman turns into a monster and attacks a man This is a spoof movie that makes fun of many popular films and celebrities. It is not meant to be taken seriously, but it contains a lot of crude humor, violence, and sexual content. Here are some of the things you should know before watching it with your kids: - A baby ogre spews green slime on a man's face. A woman's sneeze splatters another person's face with snot.

A woman exposes her huge, zit-covered, bare butt. A man has big zits on his face. A man spits in another man's eye while talking. We appreciate your feedback on our website and our work. We value your opinions, whether positive or negative. We read every email we receive, but we may not be able to reply to all of them. However, you can rest assured that we will keep your e-mail address confidential.